Reading for Pleasure: Review your practice

Primary

This self-review document is designed to help you consider your practice with regard to reading for pleasure. It is organised around key themes which, research evidence indicates, influence teachers' capacity to effectively develop children's engagement as readersreaders who like reading, who chose to read, and who want to talk about what they are reading with others (Cremin et al., 2014; Moses and Kelly, 2018).

Research evidence shows that the will to read positively influences the skill and that there is an association between choosing to read in your own time and later academic success (e.g. Sullivan and Brown, 2015). The habit of reading in childhood enriches children's vocabulary, wider knowledge of the world, their social and emotional well-being and their imaginations. Critically, it impacts upon their life chances.

To be enticed to read and supported as a reader is a fundamental right of every child (International Literacy Association, 2018).

Through reviewing your knowledge and practice you can discern next steps. Resources on the OU RfP website can help you https://ourfp.org/.

C. Reading for pleasure pedagogy

An effective RfP pedagogy encompasses planned time for reading aloud, independent reading, book talk and recommendations in the context of a social reading environment. These strands are highly interdependent and need to be deployed in a responsive manner according to need.

Reading for pleasure pedagogy: Social reading environments

9. Think of your classroom, what three key messages does the environment convey about reading?
