

Transcript

An introduction to visualising development data

PROFESSOR HANS ROSLING:

If you want to compare how people live in different countries, you must use some form of statistical measurements. That might sound scary, but today it's quite easy. This is the first in a series of short films where I will show you how to compare countries using statistics. I will show you the most commonly used measurements, what statisticians call indicators.