

SOMETHING GOOD

Focus: Listening to Pupils

Synopsis

Jude is having some problems with his newly acquired second hand car he had recently bought. While mulling over the opened car bonnet, Ejike comes along offering to help. Jude is upset at Ejike for even offering to help him, according to Jude, “nothing good could possibly emanate from a scientifically emaciated brain like Ejike’s to enable him to discern the prognosis of a decapacitated automobile.” He orders Ejike to fetch him a motor mechanic. The mechanic arrives, examines the car and charges a hefty bill for his services.

Later on in the day Jude was mulling to Montu about his troubles with his car. Montu recalls a similar fault with his truck but he adds that he was very lucky. Ejike was there to help him fix his truck free of charge. It dawned on Jude that something good could emanate from Ejike’s brain after all.
