Engaging students in integrity and ethics debates.

The E4J Modules on anti-corruption and integrity and ethics offer an innovative approach to global anti-corruption, integrity and ethics education, an area that is of critical importance to address some of the biggest challenges of our time. We hope that you, along with many educators working in universities around the world, will make use of this module series and that it adds value to new or existing course offerings, for both students and lecturers.

In this final video, Dr Nceku Nyathi, reflects on the value of engaging his students in integrity debates.

Video content is not available in this format.

We trust you have enjoyed this course and that you feel more confident in using these resources in your learning environment. Ultimately, we hope that it has stimulated and motivated you to think about how you can support your students by adapting and weaving these resources into your own teaching.

Feedback and evaluation

A group of E4J conference delegates

We hope you have enjoyed implementing E4J in your university.

This course has been developed by The Open University in support of the Education for Justice (E4J) initiative of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC).

This free course has been designed to provide practical support for educators working in universities in developing their capacity to incorporate anti-corruption integrity and ethics teaching into the curriculum.

We would welcome your feedback on this online ToT course by completing this short Evaluation survey which should only take 2-3 minutes of your time. Your feedback on the E4J Modules on Anti-corruption, Integrity and Ethics is also welcome, by completing this short Lecturer survey.
