Safeguarding information

Safeguarding is everyone's responsibility. Using these SAGE resources means applying universal principles of safeguarding for vulnerable people, including children and young people, and those with disabilities.

SAGE session guides and learner workbooks have safeguarding practice integrated in them. For wider circulation purposes, it has been removed as information is specific to each context and organisation. However, as a service provider, it is your responsibility to adhere to the relevant safeguarding standards in your area of operations. For SAGE, we decided it was key for learners and volunteers to be provided with the following information in their local language: how they should expect to be treated by the educators, staff, partners and community members who they will come into contact with as part of SAGE and the reporting mechanisms they can use if they feel unsafe. These reporting mechanisms are accessible, include the contact details of our organisation's safeguarding focal point and include safeguarding contacts who are internal and independent of our organisations.
